

presents:

What Law School Doesn't Teach: The 2018 IPI Leadership Forum

What it is: A 5-week intensive course in leadership development, meeting once per week for 2 hours. There will be homework, in the form of mandatory reading. There will be no exams or papers, and no grades.

What else it is: Free. This is an extracurricular activity associated with the Innovation Practice Institute (IPI) at Pitt Law. It is not a law school course. It won't show up on your transcript. But it might change your life.

Why you should: Leadership is professional development. It's part of innovating, part of lawyering, and part of finding a job and building a career.

When it is: Five (5) Tuesday evenings, beginning Tuesday, January 30, 2018, and continuing on February 6, February 13, February 20, and February 27. Two hours apiece, from 7 pm to 9 pm. Room 109 in the Barco Law Building. If you sign up, we expect that you will do all of the readings and attend all 5 sessions.

Who it is: Each session will be led by Prof. Michael Madison, Faculty Director of the IPI. The course is open to all Pitt Law students and all other members of the Pitt Law community, including staff, faculty, and graduates. Others are welcome by arrangement with Prof. Madison – just ask.

What you can do: Sign up by Friday, January 26 by sending an email to Prof. Madison, madison@pitt.edu, or to Amy Change, amc269@pitt.edu. And get the books on the reading list (see the URL below). Buy them used for a total cost of about $50, or find them in the Barco Law Library, on course reserve.

Learn more: At <http://innovation-practice.net/what-we-do/ipi-leadership-forum/> [or start with <http://innovation-practice.net>]

